Carlsbad in the winter time is about as bless and desolate as a western sown, which after a hard fight with weekly papers and Winchesters, had lost the county seat. The place is not dead; no more than the flowers are dead that are sleeping under the snow that had drifted down in the Boehmerwald. With the first bluebird comes the man burdened with a bad liver, and the first patient is followed closely by merchants and shooken. closely by merchants and shopkeepers, hotel men and waiters. There are merchant tailors from Vienna, china merchants from Dresden and clock makers from Switzerland.

A Grand Opening.

On the first day of May there is a grand opening. This year it was of especial importance as it opened to especial importance as a opened of the public the new bath house of Kaiserbad, which cost this enterpris-leng municipality 1,25,699 florins, and is the finest bath frome in the whole wide world, I am told. This marvelous

"Reminds me of the days when we used to line up at the postoffice in Thompsonville," said Jim, his mind going back to the big days of Colorado, when he was mayor and silver was a dollar tim.

It was a great show; men and women from everywhere, with every disease that can possibly be charged to the liver, stomach or gall. Even nervoul people come here for the baths; and get well, or think they do, which is the same thing. There were men whose skin and eyes were yellow; and others green as olives; German dudes who walked like pacing grey hounds; fat young Germans, who seemed to walking on eggs, and old gouty Germans, who did not walk at all, but shuffled.

There are big bony Britains in knickerbockers, and elderly Englishmen whose love of plaids is largely responsible for the daily rains that come to this otherwise delightful region. There are modest Americans, with their pretty wives and daughters and other Americans who talk loudly in the lobbies and cafes; Tyrolese, in green hats trimmed with feathers, and Polish Jews, with little corkscrew curis hanging down by their cars, such as we see in Jerusalem. Then there are a few stray Frenchmen walking alone, and once—but not more than once—in a while a Parisian lady, and you know her by the charmleg cut of her skirt and the way she holds it up, and the beautiful dream of a petiticast the act discloses. There are Austrian soldiers in long coats and officers in pale blue uniforms, spurred and cinched like the corset wearers of France.

But we should not complain, for nowhere are visions treated so respectfully and deceasily as at Carlsbad. I remember that the burgermeister left his place at the banquet, crossed the room, introduced himself to Mr. Thompson, touched giasses and bade him well-bome to the city, and caused a little municipal check book to be placed at the vision's elbow, so that for that day and date he could order what he craved, and it was all "on" the town. The Accommodations at Carlsbad. One can live here as one chooses for one dollar or den a day, but two people can live comfortable for $5 a day. The hote's are good, and the service almost perfect, so far as it relates to the hotels; but the service in the dining rooms, cafes and restaurants is bad. Many of these are so poorly arranged. It is a common thing to see a waiter freighting your breakfast or dinner—which is at midday here— a haif block in a pouring rain. The great trouble is to get things hot, it is next to impossible. What Carlshad needs is a sanitarium where people can have delicate dishes prepared and served hot. The stoves are too far from the tables in most places.

Americans will find many funny little things even in the best hotes.

You can go up in the elevator, but you cannot come down. You can have writing paper free in the writing room, but not in your apartments. You can get hot mik—or warm milk—but they will put butter in it. You they will be there is no complaint.

not for a miracle.

Some things appear a little inconsistent and trying on the waters, and yet I know not that the visitors go utter oblivion. And it is too good to be lost.

The young man who told it was employed in Lawyer Goff's office at the image and here is the story as he told it.

William Travers Jerome and Mr.

On the morning of the 19th of May, when we went down to the Brunn to drink, a thousand people were standing in line. When Appe had finished Goff turned to his desk to finish some work; Jerome picked up a newspaper, and Dr. Parkhurst, with clasped hands, stared intently at the celling.

"I beg your pardon, doctor."
George Appo has a very soft voice, but the doctor was so intent upon his reverie that he looked up with a start.

reverie that he looked up with a start.

"Could you let me have two tens for a five? I need some change."

"Certainly—certainly. To be sure. I guess I've got it. Here—yes—two tens—to be sure."

With cherubic blandness Appo handed Dr. Parkhurst a five-dollar note, which, without scrutiny, the reverend gentleman pocketed. Jerome had seen it all, and in his endeavors to refrain from laughing, was almost purple in the face. Appo winked to him, and walked into the outer office. "Oh, Mr. Appo," he called, softly. "What is it, doctor"

"Didn't I give you two ten-dollar bills, just now?"

"Yes, doctor. That's what I asked you for."

Then came an explosion, and Jerome was rolling in his chair convalsed with laughter, in which, after a few misutes' thought, Dr. Parkhurst joined—in moderation.—New York Recorder.

A WIFE WITH BUSINESS TALENT. Judge Gibson, of the Clark, Ind., circuit ourt, some months ago granted a di orce separating Anna and Abraham Fineberg. are proficient enough to reach a drowning person or tow him to safety or support him until assistance arrives. This is due to the fact that the particular muscles which swimming calls into play, have become flaccid through want of exercise and consequently gives out at the critical moment.

For all Ages and Conditions.

Everyone can learn to swim, even cripples and deformed persons. Self-confidence only is required. It is not intended here to outline the various methods of learning to swim. Detailed descriptions are in such eas a almost worthless. The boy who really desires to learn can Go so either at a matatorium or by watching a swimmer and bicking it up for himself. After two or three attempts, either by crawling off a shelving shore until his hands cannot reach the bottom, when he is bound to take a streke or two, or possibly by placing under his chest a board or plank, he will have made some headway, and proficiency then is only a matter of practice.

To Acquire Sk.II.

It is a good thing for a bey to develop a fast stroke, though not quite so important a matter as that of acquiring good staying powers.

Among the great bugbears in the sport is the cramp which is likely to selze the best of swimmers. Every one should

"I shouldn't take the matter to bear." end the matter.

To acquire Sk.ii.

To become a speedy swimmer is, however, more difficult. This, as well as long distance swimming, requires considerable muscular effort and good staying powers. One of the great infistances made by persons when they first began to practice for speed is in trusting to their arms for the principal impetus. Any professional swimmer will tell you that this is wrong; that if it i

At that moment and while the fat man was preparing to move on, a 12-year-old gamin came along and stopped to grin and chuckle and exclaim; "Hully-gee, but if here hain't a feather bed with legs on to it!"

The officer drove the boy away and tried to excuse the matter, but the fat man was touched on the raw again, and he sat down with tears in his eyes and exclaimed:

"Didn't I tell you so! There it goes again! I asked for protection, but there is no protection! A short, fat man ought to be respected just as much as a tall, lean man, but am I? I came into Detroit to do business, but I shall do no business. I shall go back to the depot and sit down till, my train goes, and if anybody yells 'Hello, Fatty!' at me while I am waiting he must look out for himself.
